LIQUOR TOPIC ENLIVENS CAMPAIGN IN OHIO; SPEAKING OVER; AWAIT TOMORROW'S BALLOTS

The most apathetic general election campaign in recent years virtually came to a close last night. Both sides claim victories in the various State campaigns. In the Congressional elections, while the retention of control of the House and Senate is conceded the Democrats, Republican leaders are claiming big gains in the House, threatoning to reduce the Democratic majority of 147 to less than 50 votes. In the Senate the best guess is that the Democrats will gain at least one seat giving them a majority of twelve.

While a distinct trend toward the Republican standard is claimed by the Republicans, and while conservative Democrats admit this, it ### is hard to locate or analyze. Interest in Four States.

In the State fights, interest hinges on New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois. In all of these, with the possible exception of Ohio, the Wilson administration is playing a most important part. In New York the President and his Most Notorious Resort in friends are making heroic efforts, not only to retain the thirty-one Democrats in the Congressional delegation, and elect Ambassador Gerard to succeed Senator Root, but to continue a Democratic State administration through the election of Gov. Glynn and his ticket. And the cry there, as elsewhere, is for the support of the administration In Pennsylvania the administration Is peculiarly on trial, with-indications that Senator Penrose will defeat Representstive A Mitchell Palmer, Democrat, and Wilson apokesman on the committee that held back information as to refusals and framed the tariff bill, and Gifford Pinchot, Progressive candidate, Penrose has behind him the most efficient political machine he has cammanded for years, the thousands of high protectionists in brazen injustices imaginable under existthe State, and the solid nonpartisan liquor machine. He is expected to reduce the Democratic representation in the tained renewals of licenses in preference House from twelve to four or six votes.
